Genealogical searches on the Internet are yielding extraordinary results. FamilySearch.org is a free website which is easily searchable. Recently the folks at FamilySearch have created a Pilot website that allows family history researchers to retrieve actual images of historical documents pertaining to their ancestors. Millions of indexed records are available, including vital records, baptismal records, and federal censuses, and the database is growing every month.

Our speaker, Lorenzo Cuesta, a long time family historian, will guide us through the process of searching for our ancestors by explaining the problems he managed to solve with this great tool. He has many tips to share, which will help us to make the best use of our research time and garner excellent results.

USING FREE WEBSITES FOR YOUR GENEALOGICAL RESEARCH

SPEAKER: SUSAN GOSS JOHNSTON

There are amazing free family history resources available online; most of these sites aren't identified with flashing signs: "Genealogists Stop Here!" Researchers need to be a bit more adventurous to find them. Come along as we solve genealogy problems using only free websites: FamilySearch, the Library of Congress, the National Archives, state archives, libraries, and more. Post-meeting practice sessions will be arranged at a future date to implement our new-found search techniques.

Susan Goss Johnston earned a degree in physics at Yale before discovering a passion for genealogy. For over 30 years she has followed that passion as a genealogist, teacher, and lecturer. Johnston currently teaches genealogical research procedures and techniques for both beginning and advanced students at Las Positas College in Livermore.
